Heir to an illustrious family of sculptors, Wabi grew up in the company of a virtuoso. His late father, Amidou Dossou, received the art world's critical acclaim in 1989, at the legendary exhibition 'Magicians of The Earth' which took place at Le Centre Pompidou, in Paris.

The creed of The Dossou Family is rooted in the cultural ideologies of Fon & Yorùbá, linked through history and tradition to the Kingdom of Dahomey. Dating back to the mid-18th century, in the sovereign state of Kétou, the Gèlèdè sacred rites are lavish multimedia operas, performed to this day, in the popular genre of the 'Masquerade', honouring "Ìyá Nlá", the primordial Orisha spirit and Mother of all creations in Yorùbá cosmology. The oral tradition of Gèlèdè, one of West Africa's crown jewels, is inscribed by UNESCO on the List of Humanity's Intangible Cultural Heritage.

Now leading his own practice, Wabi Dossou brings new meaning to the historical tradition of Gèlèdè. Bold, beautiful yet caustic in their wit and humour, his 'Diverted Objects' speak to a form of higher art. Through an ingenious neo expressionist subterfuge, these incomparable hybrid sculptures cross-pollinate the paragons of high fashion, music, pop culture and street art. Each interrogates us on notions of memory preservation, capitalism sustainability and mass-consumerism.
